THE MISSIONARIES COUNTED.

So much is said in the columns of the anti-American press of this city about the "Missionary Government now in power" that a stranger might be pardoned for the belief that Hawaiian affairs were administered by a guild of clergymen to the exclusion of the agricultural, commercial and business classes.

How far short of the truth both the charge and the assumption fall will be seen by an examination of the official published directory of the Government. Beginning with the Councils we find three men out of eighteen who are descendants of missionaries though engaged in secular pursuits themselves. Two are lawyers and one is a banker, and the only claim either of them have to the title "missionary," aside from descent is that they go to church and pay their debts. Of the remaining fifteen legislators, including the Vice President, there is not a man with a drop of missionary blood in his veins. In the Supreme Court of seven members and attaches there is one son of a missionary—a man whose father, a physician, was for years premier of the Kingdom. In the Circuit and District Courts are no missionaries. President Dole as his own premier is the only one in the Department of Foreign Affairs. There are two among the sixteen people connected with the Department of the Interior, none in the Bureau of Agriculture, two out of eight in the Department of Finance, one out of five among the chiefs of the Customs Bureau, two out of seven in the Department of the Attorney-General, one out of seven in the Board of Immigration, two out of fourteen in the Board of Health, none at all in the Board of Education and but one in the Board of Crown Land Commissioners.

In this summary one "Missionary," so-called, has counted for several; as for example Mr. Smith, who was registered in one place as Attorney-General appears also as member ex-officio, of several boards. Summed up, man for man, and the total number of Government officials of Missionary inheritance, there being none at all of Missionary occupation, is nine out of a grand total of ninety-four. It is upon such fragile foundation as this that the charge of missionary control of these Islands is based.

A SHAM OF INDEPENDENCE.

It is an odd circumstance that a demand for Hawaiian "independence" should be made in the name of an ex-royalist who sought to destroy such independence as the people had by means of a despotic constitution drawn to displace a liberal one. The monarchy fell when it did because of its bold stroke for Royal tyranny—and yet here we find its predatory friends whining and prating for restoration on the ground that the "independence" of the people has been taken away. In truth the wolf that threatened the paddock now wears fleece and bleats like a lamb and wants the bars let down because, forsooth, the paling around the flock limits the freedom of the sheep. The situation as it stands merits another Esop.

It used to be said that patriotism is the last refuge of the scoundrel and that the gravest crimes are committed in the name of liberty. There is much truth in both these sentiments as they are viewed from the debating-point of Hawaiian Kingship. In the lexicon of pre-January politics patriotism meant obedience to a lottery-bargaining, opium consuming and tyrannical Queen and tolerance of a banditti that thieved for the very lust of thieving and made the morals of the land a jest and byword. As for "liberty" that was a thing to be enjoyed at the pleasure of the Crown and to be given or taken at the will of one who held her thrifty whims above even the Constitution which she had sworn to support. Both words were decoys to a pirate lair, mouthed by a woman who had the soul of Nero and the taint of Judas and who aimed at power as absolute as that which the first Kamehameha enforced with spear and war-club.

Any real conception of liberty revolts at the proposal to return this modern mixture of the Medici and the Stuart to the functions of Hawaiian government. In her power-of-attorney to Paul Neumann this woman showed beyond recall what trifling weight she gave to the welfare of her subjects, what lengths of treachery and betrayal she was ready to reach out for in her own behalf and family gain. She may talk glibly now of liberty and independence and patriotism but she means nothing by it but despotism and obedience and personal prerogative. Her whole history tells this from the time when she denounced her bribe-taking brother for yielding to the behests of the manhood of Hawaii for reform in administrative methods down to the day when she stabbed the liberal constitution in the back. It matters not that she tried to avoid the consequences of her last act by meanly accusing her native subjects of coercion. She had shown her hand and that was enough. It was the hand of a would-be tyrant.

If liberty and independence are to have a home on these islands it must be under the aegis of a constitution that cannot be overturned by the functionaries which it maintains, under a flag that is powerful in its own defense and amidst a population which is imbued by democratic thought. Annexation provides all these conditions. It is the only available recourse which does. Without it, to our mind, there can be no realization upon these islands of free and representative Government. Certainly nothing that Royalty holds out as a temptation to the foolish could be so construed.

HOME RULE.

A half-white correspondent asks the STAR why, if complete home rule would make Australia great and powerful, it would not be a good thing for Hawaii also.

The answer is that in Australia the majority is capable of self-government and in Hawaii it is not. It counts for very much that the one is an Anglo-Saxon country, the other an aboriginal community with a small white population. Moreover, as an independent native State Hawaii has already proved itself a failure, in a history filled with the records of foreign seizure and domestic insurrection. The only hope it can have of future comfort and tranquility is through absorption by some great and stable power.

While the benefits of complete home rule are of wide application they presuppose a higher grade of civilization on the part of the voting majority than exists in any of the native settlements of the Pacific.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT.

Judge Whiting Renders Two Decisions in Garnishment Cases.

In the cases of M. W. McChesney & Sons, plaintiffs, vs. Charles Lind, defendant, and J. F. Morgan and J. A. Magoon, garnishees, and P. G. Camarinos, plaintiff, against the same defendants and garnishees, tried by consent in vacation, without a jury, Judge Whiting this morning filed his decision. Both actions were on appeal of plaintiffs from a judgment rendered against the garnishee, J. A. Magoon, for $40 83, a balance in his hands of defendant Lind, the plaintiffs claiming that this garnishee should be held in a larger sum. The garnishee, Morgan, had no funds of defendant in his hand and was discharged. Judge Whiting sustains the decision of the District Judge, and orders the plaintiffs to pay all costs of defendant and the garnishee.
